Hear!
From this day forth
are the heights of Horeb broken and the sea of sulphur-ice.

And blasphemy!
in heaven's chambers:
Souls had fled their halls
and closed was the book of life.
And behold!
The great, white throne:
black
with sacred blood

Our father Dead by his own hands:
an epitaph
worthy no king.

And so is everything a nameless lie. Who, my god, am I?

Man knows me
as Lucifer, the serpent of old.
The wretched hold my banner high.
Your gift
- all life! I grant a grave
Yet I am not your death.

Come carry forth the crown to your once held throne.

Here is where my suffering should cease - but alas; I am crowned in grief unheard of!

In this lone monarchy
- without a friend of foe I greet the mourning sun
with strife and a song:
Please speak my name!
And leave me not in the dust of death.

I am weighed down beneath the tragedy crown, nameless, and alone, a fatherless son.

[JHS 1996]