My old black cat passed away this morning He never knew what a hard day was. Woke up late and danced on tin roofs. If questioned "Why?" - answered, "Just because."

He never spoke much, preferring silence: eight lost lives was all he had. Occasionally sneaked some Sunday dinner. He wasn't good and he wasn't bad.

My old black cat wasn't much of a looker. You could pass him by - just a quiet shadow. Got pushed around by all the other little guys. Didn't seem to mind much - just the way life goes.

Padded about in furry slippers.
Didn't make any special friends.
He played it cool with wide-eyed innocence,
Receiving gladly what the good Lord sends.

Forgot to give his Christmas present.

Black cat collar, nice and new.

Thought he'd make it through to New Year.

I guess this song will have to do.
